DEPARTMENT OF ZOOLOGY
ALUMNI ASSOCIATION ACTIVITIES REPORT 2021 - 22

The department of Zoology conducted a certificate course and a capacity building workshop on Vermitechnology and Vermiculture by Dr. Rini Joseph (alumna, 2010 – 13, B.Sc. Zoology Batch) on 22/10/2021, 9.30 am – 4.30 pm, on google meet platform. The resource person highlighted the importance of earthworms and its role in soil fertility enrichment and organic farming. The speaker encapsulated the finer details of vermicomposting and vermitechnology to the students.

The earthworm documentation dated long back from 384-322 BC when the famous Greek Philosopher Aristotle (330 BC) described it as

"The intestine of the earth"

Since then this group of invertebrates got the attention of many naturalists and philosophers.

Charles Darwin (1809- 1882) was the first person to bring scientific attention to earthworms in the 1800s.

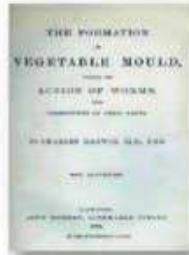

The role of earthworms in
• breaking down organic residues in soil
• making the soil porous by their sustained burrowing activity.

The importance of earthworms as ecosystem engineers and wrote an entire book about them after 40 years of his observations and experimental works.

The Formation of Vegetable Mould through the Action of Worms

Darwin wrote :

The plough is one of the greatest inventions of man ; but long back the earthworms were continuously ploughing land day and night.

Darwin states that "It may be doubted whether there are many other animals which have played such an important part in the history of the world" about earthworms.

Caricature of Charles Darwin's theory of evolution 'Man is but a worm' published in a Punch almanac (6 December 1881) after Darwin released The Formation of Vegetable Mould through the Action of Worms.
